On the term >Master Race<

Anyone with a politically correct upbringing will view the term >Master Race< as characteristic of Nazi ideology, and the computer encyclopedia Wikipedia states this. It explains that this was "a central term during the Nazi era"[1]: "Within Nazi ideology, this term was used to highlight one's own or related people." However, in the multi-page article, which cites many quotes and sources, not a single quote from a National Socialist is cited who used this term.

[1] In Wikipedia under the keyword >master race<

Apparently, the term did not exist at all during the Nazi era. This is evidently a false accusation, as historian Stefan SCHEIL pointed out.[2] Since the time of the Nuremberg trials, this term has been unjustifiably attributed to the people being tried.

Stefan SCHEIL, »Master Race«, in: Junge Freiheit , 18.2. 2012

On April 15, 1946, Alfred ROSENBERG, when asked about the "master race" by his defence attorney Dr. THOMAS, stated before the Nuremberg Tribunal: "I have never heard the term master race as much as I have in this courtroom." To my knowledge, I have not mentioned or used it at all in my writings. I have leafed through my writings and speeches again and have not found this word. I only spoke once of Homer 's "Master Race" and found a quote from a British author who, writing about the life of Lord KITCHENERs, declared that he had proven himself to be a master race. I then found the term >master race< in the writings of the American racial researcher Madison GRAND and the French racial researcher LAPOUGE."[3]

[3] International Court of Justice Nuremberg, The Nuremberg Trials, Delphin, Munich-Zurich 1984, Vol. 11, p. 496 f.

There was also a significant dialogue on April 17, 1946, between the accused Nazi ideologist Alfred ROSENBERG and the prosecutor DODD, who was working in Nuremberg.[4] ROSENBERG complained about the English translation of the trial documents and conversations. There, they always speak of the >Master Race<, or 'Master Race' in English. This term, however, is not even included in the German documents presented. ROSENBERG explained to DODD: "In the very last document that you presented to me, I again heard the translation of the word >Master Race<. The document mentions nothing at all about the >Master Race<." This is astonishing, given that ROSENBERG was and is considered the chief ideologist of the Nazi Party. But DODD responded that this did not interest him and continued to use the term accusatory. Even in the closing arguments of the Nuremberg Tribunal, for example on 20 September 1946 (IMT, Vol. 22, p. 477), the term >Master Race< was used to justify the charges against, among others, ROSENBERG, who was accused of having preached the >Master Race<. This unjustified accusation was further used by those attempting to come to terms with the past in Germany.

[4] Ibid., Vol. 11, p. 607.

On the term >Master Race<

From top: Alfred ROSENBBERG and Thomas J. DODD.

If one looks through the written works of leading Nazi ideologues, one is surprised to find that this term does not appear even once. Thus, in the following books—which include subject indexes and are fundamental to the ideology of the NSDAP—it does not appear even once in the indexes:

1. Adolf HITLER, Mein Kampf, anniversary edition, Munich, 1939.
2. Adolf HITLER, Hitler's Second Book (1928), Stuttgart 1961
3. Philipp BOUHLER (ed.), Speeches of the Führer (1939-41), Munich, 1942.
4. Ibid. The Greater German Freedom Struggle: Speeches of the Führer (1941-1942), Munich, 1942.
5. Hans WAGNER, Pocket Dictionary of National Socialism, 1934.
6. The new Brockhaus in four volumes, Leipzig 1941.
7. Werner JOCHMANN (ed.), Adolf Hitler: Monologues in the Führer's Headquarters 1941-1944, Munich 1980
8. Henry PICKER, Hitler's Table Talks at the Führer's Headquarters, Stuttgart 1963
9. Max DOMARUS, Hitler, Speeches 1932 to 1945, Wiesbaden 1973.
10. Imanuel GEISS, History at Your Fingertips, Vol. 5, Concepts. Dortmund 1993.
11. Alfred ROSENBERG, The Myth of the 20th Century, Munich 1930.
12. Housten Stewart CHAMBERLAIN, The Foundations of the Nineteenth Century, Munich 1915.

Apparently, the >Nazis< must have kept the "central concept" of their ideology, according to today's prevailing opinion, so secret that it does not appear in any of their most important ideological writings. However, since no reasonable motive for such secrecy is conceivable, the Alternatively, the claim that it was a central concept may be false. Today's politically correct, including Wikipedia, which devotes a lengthy article to this term and provides a number of other quotes, cannot produce any document to support their claim. They unscrupulously assert the obviously false. And this falsification of history unfortunately has far-reaching consequences. Today's politicians also use these false claims. SCHEIL states that the Mecklenburg SPD politician Stefanie DRESE in the Schwerin state parliament with applause from all factions except the NPD was taken into account when she declared that two world wars had been fought by Germany - so that the »German Master Race« prevails over the other peoples." [5] This clearly further raises awareness Contemporary history falsified.

Rolf Kosiek

[5] SCHEIL, op. cit. (Note 2)